SECRET PARTNER

The barker at the carnival was in his full glory as he repeated his well memorized speech to the crowd standing before him.

"Just come a little closer folks. You are going to witness the finest shooting the world has ever seen. That famous killer, Two Gun Tommy, will demonstrate his remarkable ability in handling those weapons invented by the late Mr. Colt. I present to you, the man who can accomplish miracles with his guns."

A young man dressed in a dark black shirt, with large pearl buttons running down the front of it, gray chaps, and two white gun belts stepped onto a small stage. He removed a stetson from his head which he placed on the table. Twelve clay pipes were on two racks.

"Watch what is going to happen but don't be scared, folks," continued the barker. "In just one second he is going to turn around and blast those pipes. And not a miss. No sir, Two Gun Tommy never misses."

The young man, with lightning speed went for those guns in his holsters. He fired every round and smashed the heads of all the pipes.

"Now for the price of twenty five cents, in good American coins, you can go inside this tent and watch how Indians go on the war path. Watch our hero rescue the damsel just in time. The show of a lifetime, folks. Don't miss it."

The crowd eagerly paid their money to enter the tent. A middle aged man, well dressed went up to Two Gun Tommy.

"I am John Campbell. Any place we can talk in private?"

The young man got off the stage and motioned to the middle aged man to follow him. They entered a small wagon fitted up with some chairs and a desk.

"Make yourself comfortable," said Tommy

Turner. "I got your letter, mister, and the money you sent to me. Now let's get right down to facts. I'm not tied by any contract I can leave this carnival tomorrow. Just what have you got to offer?"

"I am mayor of one of the worst towns in the West," began John Campbell. "Larson Creek has been described as a town of bad men, bad drinks, and sudden death. No peace officer has been able to last there for even a week. Frank Strongin, owner of the Middle Branch Gambling Establishment, runs the town. He also controls the robbing of stage coaches and rustling. I am authorized to offer you a thousand dollars a week in addition to your regular weekly salary of fifty dollars. A group of public spirited citizens and ranchers have chipped in the money. And a bonus of ten thousand dollars if you clean up the town."

Tommy Turner whistled as he listened to the offer. Then a big broad smile appeared on his face.

"You don't even know if I can a ride a horse. But, I'll tell you what I'll do. Give me two weeks' salary right now and I'll leave with you in the morning."

The stage coach to Larson Creek had only two passengers: the mayor and the new sheriff, who was already wearing his badge of office as he stepped down from the coach. Frank Strongin was in his office when the news was brought to him by Pete Mebel.

"The welcoming committee is out there greeting the new law guy. Joseph Girard of the Bar Q ranch and his daughter Mabel are going to show him around. Shall we plug the guy this evening?"

Frank Strongin sent for half a dozen of his toughest men and when they were assembled in his private office he spoke to them.

"This fellow, Two Gun Tommy, can do anything with a six shooter. If you want to die quickly, just tangle with him. He comes from a carnival show and he can wipe you fellows all out before you can go for your guns."

Henry Souette had more than ten notches on his six shooter and that didn't include redskins. He wasn't afraid of anything.

"You aren't going soft, are you boss?" he questioned as his hand sort of dropped near his gun.

Every eye was on Frank Strongin and the men waited for his answer. It came slowly and deliberately.

"A man can fight with his brain as well as his gun. When the time comes, I'll put that new sheriff underground myself. But if you think I'm fooling then listen to this offer.

"Two thousand dollars to just twenty cents of your money that if you go gumming for him, you'll be the dead one."

Henry Souette threw two ten cent pieces on the desk and left the office. He headed down Main Street and the stage coach office. But just now Tommy Turner was listening to welcoming speeches and also looking closer at Mabel Girard.

"If I knew the West had gals like you," said Tommy Turner, "I would have come out here years ago. To think of all the time I have wasted. Now I am sheriff so I am going to give you an order. Just be at my side and show me the sights."

Suddenly the crowd of people began to thin out. Joseph Girard grabbed the hand of his daughter and yanked her into the stage coach office.

"A killer is coming down the street to get you," warned the mayor. "Hope you understand why I am going for cover."

Slowly, Henry Souette walked until he was about five feet from the new sheriff. He studied the two gun belt affair and the show-off outfit worn by the ex-carnival star.

"I give you two minutes to get out of town. Then I go for my gun. If you are here, you'll just be a dead body."

Those hundred and twenty seconds seemed a long time to Two Gun Tommy but he didn't blink an eye. Henry Souette went for his gun but never made it. Two Gun Tommy only went for his right gun and it came out blazing. A corpse hit the street. Then Two Gun Tommy shouted to the scared people inside the stage coach office.

"All over now, folks. Next show begins this evening. And say, Miss Mabel, I want to talk more to you and your father."

They broke the news to Frank Strongin in a very simple way. Two of his boys, Slim Sanders and Ed Neubert brought in on a board the earthly remains of a once well known killer.

"I guess you can keep the twenty cents, boss," remarked Ed Neubert. "But one thing is certain. This new sheriff will kill all of us. So what do we do? I'm going to head for a place I know down the Rio Grande. How about my share of the stuff? You are holding it in the safe."

"We agreed to split at the end of the year," reminded Frank Strongin. "Stay here and you get your share. Quit, and you get nothing."

"I'm quitting," snapped back Ed Neubert. "And Slim Sanders is coming with me."

An hour later the new sheriff was in a rather old office when he received a visitor. Two Gun Tommy was gazing into Mabel's eyes when he walked Frank Strongin.

"I got good reason to believe they are going to try to open my safe tonight," said the owner of the gambling place. "After the crowd leaves, I want you to help me."

"Can I come and see the fun?" asked Mabel.

"If you can't," replied the gallant new sheriff, "then I won't protect that safe."

It was four in the morning as half a dozen masked men entered the empty gambling establishment. With drawn guns they entered the room where the safe was located. It was open and nothing inside of it. As they rushed out and up on the balcony, the firm voice of the sheriff gave an order.

"Drop those guns or drop down dead."

Three men dropped their guns to the floor. The other three tried to shoot but soon left the land of the living. Two Gun Tommy came down the stairway.

"Unmask," he ordered.

And they all saw that one of those men was none other than the mayor himself. Mabel and her father quickly came down the stairs. And soon Frank Strongin joined him.

"The mayor was your secret partner," explained Two Gun Tommy. "He wanted me to get rid of all of you and that meant he would be alone and get all the loot. I overheard him tell one of the men to warn Frank Strongin. This was going to be something of a massacre. You see, there are nine other members of the gang outside. But all fled up. Mr. Girard let me use some of his cowboys and they trapped them. Better talk now, Mr. Strongin. First one who talks gets a better deal from the law."

The most peaceful town in the West is Larson Creek. The sheriff out there wears a black shirt with pearl buttons. His wife, Mabel, has but one comment to make to all reporters.

"I don't mind a black shirt. It never shows the dirt, and doesn't require much washing. Pardon me, I have to go back to the ranch and take care of our twins."
